↑ Karen Hardy, Accent Interiors

WINDOW DRESSING AND MORE

The next time you stop by the Jefferson Hotel to admire its opulent rotunda, give a little hat tip to Karen Hardy. The owner of Accent Interiors (formerly known as Accent Draperies & Fine Interiors), located on Chamberlayne Avenue, she created all of the custom window treatments at the historic hotel and its on-site restaurant, Lemaire.

Hardy also counts City Hall among her esteemed clients — she's decorated the mayor's office — but you'll see her work in humble homes throughout the Richmond area, too. Besides window treatments, Hardy, who is a Class B contractor, also offers interior design and renovation services.

Though she's been in business for more than 25 years, interior design wasn't Hardy's original career. She started out working as a registered nurse but discovered a passion for design when she and her husband built their first home. She began doing window treatments, and over the years, her offerings evolved to serve the company's growing customer base.

"It used to be a very old Richmond clientele, but now we work with people from all over," Hardy says. "The market is getting very diverse. People want transitional, they want eclectic and modern with a little edge, so it's not just the same Richmond tradition."

As to what sets Accent Interiors apart, Hardy says it's her listening skills. "We have a desire to create the space that the client wants. We listen to our clients and work with the budget they give us. They know I'm their advocate. I always have their best interests at heart."

GLOBAL INFLUENCE

As a busy small business owner, Janet Brown doesn't have a lot of time to travel. But when she does, she's in designer mode. Whether she's visiting Maine or Morocco, the founder of Janet Brown Interiors always manages to find inspiration for her design work, along with new stock for her retail shop. From Turkish suzani to handcrafted bowls and textiles from Chile, her store is stuffed with unique items from around the world.

Janet Brown Interiors' Carytown shop had been a fixture of the Richmond design scene since 1994, but Brown recently shifted gears following a relocation to Scott's Addition. "With the move, I definitely wanted to focus more on the design side of the business," she says.

That said, her well-stocked store offers immediate access to furniture and accessories when she's working with clients, not to mention inspiration to shoppers just looking to spruce up their living space. Brown's style veers toward the traditional with a global bent, though she works with each client to get to the heart of their unique style.

Most of her clients come to Brown via word of mouth, but she says the demographic is always changing — just as the city is evolving. "The Richmond market has changed tremendously," she says. "We used to be a conservative, Southern town, and now we have influences coming from all over. It still has old Richmond roots, which is great, and we have the architecture to go with that, but now you can go into a Fan house, or a house on Monument, or one in Church Hill, and see just about anything." —EJC

FINE CREATIONS

For Maurice Beane, a coffee table isn't just something you should pick up at Target. It can be a piece of art that enlivens your home and lasts for generations. Working primarily in metal and stone, Beane creates architecturally inspired furniture and sculptures for both residential and commercial spaces.

Beane earned a BFA from Virginia Commonwealth University in 1984 and has been working professionally as a designer ever since.

Early in his career, he was heavily involved with the Visual Arts Center of Richmond — then called the Hand Workshop — and in 2011 he was honored with the organization's Distinguished Service Award. In the late '90s, he also started dealing in Midcentury Modern furniture and accessories.

Today, Beane says many of his furniture-dealing clients are in their 60s, 70s and 80s. "I would like to work with more of the millennial generation, but they don't collect the way that their parents and grandparents do," Beane says. "People say [millennials are] more into experiences, and I believe that. I hope it changes."

Beane works mostly on commissions now, creating pieces that are heavily influenced by the French Art Deco period. "Anything that is handmade, the quality of materials and workmanship, more often than not, these things will hold their value and oftentimes appreciate in value," Beane says of his creations. "The market for fine art and contemporary craft is continuing to grow." —EJC

↑ Jenny Jenkins-Rash and Bob Sneed of Sneed's Nursery

LOCAL GARDEN GURUS

Even if you were born without a green thumb, you're bound to smile when you catch a glimpse of Sneed's Nursery's consistently cheeky marquee on Huguenot Road. The pun-loving staff offers messages like "May the Forest Be with You" — but fortunately, that's not all they do.

The nursery has been serving area gardeners since 1976, when Bob and Tommy Sneed opened a landscaping business next door to their grandparents' long-running general store in Bon Air. Today, the center offers landscaping services as well as an expansive retail division, with a focus on sustainably grown plants and flowers. "We are extremely proud of our efforts to teach and support organic gardening through classes, community outreach, and products that make organic gardening understandable and enjoyable," Bob Sneed says.

Jenny Jenkins-Rash has been the garden center manager for nearly 20 years. She's been a big part of defining the center's mission, from eliminating chemicals in 2009 to promoting native plants and healthy pollinators. "I think everyone's becoming more aware of how your actions definitely aren't just affecting you, but those around you," Jenkins-Rash says of the center's educational mission. "We are the River City, so we're committed to letting people know that what you do in your yard affects the river and ultimately the bay."

Besides offering community education, Sneed's has also become a peaceful respite for many Richmonders. "Customers want to be here because it's relaxing," Jenkins-Rash says. "They want to enjoy the beauty, the chickens and employees. Some people come here not just to buy a plant, but because it makes them feel good. It means something to people." —EJC

HOME-GOOD HAVEN

here can you go to pick up a housewarming gift, get an antique chair repaired and take a selfie in front of a giant angel-wing mural? Tucked away on an unassuming stretch of Westwood Avenue, Tinker's has been offering an unexpected selection of home goods for 30 years.

Tinker's opened in 1988 as an offshoot of Tinker & Co., a furniture restoration company run by Tony Coleman. "At first it was a weekend hobby type of business, but then my husband discovered his passion for seeing things come back to life," says Tony's wife, Sharon, who runs Tinker's. "Slowly it grew, and today it is one of the largest restoration companies in the Southeast."

The company's 20,000-square-foot space is made up of two buildings just off of Broad Street, rebuilt after their original space burned down in 1998. The retail side is jam-packed with local art, furniture, lighting, jewelry and gifts for everyone from newborns to newlyweds.

When the holiday season rolls around, customers line up for the shop's popular Christmas open house. "[It's] the most over-the-top thing we do all year," Sharon says, "and customers wait outside just to get in and see this magical wonderland that we transform."

The rest of the year, she keeps the selection fresh by regularly heading to market in New York and Atlanta. "RVA is definitely into staying on trend with what's happening, whether it's beer, food, fashion, home or even baby," Sharon says. "We go out of our way to find items are that fun, functional and yet affordable." —EJC

FROM HOME DESIGN TO DIY

Even with the recent resurgence in the popularity of wallpaper, it's hard to imagine a store specializing in that product alone — but that's just what Williams & Sherrill did in its early days. When owner Patrick Williams noticed the wallpaper trend dropping off in the 1990s, he switched course — and it wouldn't be the last time, either.

"Over the years, our business has changed many times, and typically it's changed based on consumer demand," Williams says. The company's most recent shift took place last fall, when the main Williams & Sherrill store expanded into a full home design center, complete with furniture and accessories. "We carry everything from more traditional styles to modern styles," Williams says. "The style today is more eclectic, where you start with a base of traditional and decelerate that traditional with influences of modern or reclaimed industrial or antique pieces."

Another big change: The store's Interior Outlet was reborn as W&S Textiles, carrying one of the largest selections of in-stock fabric in the region. Longtime Williams & Sherrill employees Alice Trivett and Orlando White, both managers at the textiles store, have each been with the company for close to 20 years.

"We have more people doing DIY projects today than before," White notes of the textile store's clientele. "The only problem is, due to the DIY TV shows, they think it's a lot easier than it is, so ... a lot of times they get stuck and frustrated, and they need us to complete what they started." Luckily, the W&S crew is well-trained to help customers navigate the finer points of DIY projects — no judgment.

"We like to let customers know they're not alone through this process," White says. "We're here for them." —EJC

Welcome to the New Real Estate World of “No Surprises”

We've Reinvented the Process of Buying and Selling Real Estate in Greater Richmond

Before we place a home on the market, we order - at our expense - an up-front market evaluation by a licensed appraiser and a home inspection by an independent home inspector.

By addressing any potential problems first,
we eliminate any last minute surprises that could delay closing or result in unforeseen expenses.

This brings peace of mind to both buyers and sellers of any Liz Moore & Associates listing.

And less stress makes for the best real estate experience you've ever had.
